The role of sport in boys' schools

Sport has played an important role in the success of single sex boys' schools since their inception. For many boys sport has connected them with the school allowing students to improve academically. Sport and other co curricular activities have also provided an opportunity for boys and teachers to work together in other arenas outside the classroom.

Sport introduces boys to the concept of playing for a team and understanding sportsmanship and loyalty to their team members and coaches. Training to prepare for a sporting season has developed into a discipline in itself and keeps the growing body healthy.

The conference will also study and assert the gifts that boys bring to our schools and, in that process, invent more effective ways to involve boys and coaches in the sporting program at our schools.

The IBSC one day conference and conference dinner will examine the role of sport in boys' schools past, present and future. Recent directions of a more professional approach to schoolboy sport and the employment of specialist coaches will also be explored by keynote speakers and in workshops.

Educators involved and interested in sport in single sex boys' schools are requested to keep Monday 21st March, 2011 available to attend the International Boys' School Coalition/Shore School Conference.

Conference registration is available through the TRYBOOKING at:
